

Cambodia, Malaysia, Nepal, Thailand and Vietnam. NCDPI plans to continue to form partnerships with additional organizations so more can be added to the state's iTunes U content in the future.

“Government agencies, districts and schools often struggle to find ways to provide low-cost to access digital media files from one central location,” said State Board of Education Chairman Bill Harrison. “By working together and using iTunes U, we can all share the valuable 21st century learning resources created by a variety of state agencies and organizations with expertise in K-12 education.”

For more information about North Carolina's iTunes U site visit
<http://www.ncpublicschools.org/itunesu/> or contact NCDPI Communications at 919.807.3450.

###